Read the user comment below. User comments: "I just wanted to thank you for your great application. I am an academic researcher with ADHD, and @Vremend has helped me immensely. (...) In my case, ADHD appears with focus and attention challenges. When I do this I always read pages, re-read sentences, read paragraphs or paragraphs that I have "zoned out" (...) when I @wow. These problems are solved when I use it to read "written papers." The TTS-format keeps me up-to-date because when I get distracted while listening, the speech continues and I can go back to the author's complete thinking. And thanks to @Voice's intuitive interface (especially the highlighting function), it's easy to find, needs. (...) @Voice has really improved my life and prospects. Options for additional pause between paragraphs, start talking as soon as a new article is loaded or wait for a button press, start/stop talking when wired headset plug is inserted/removed. Optional sleep timer to stop speech after a given timeout. ABOUT PERMISSIONS: Internet access is needed because the "Share" function from web browsers and any news reading apps I tried, sends us only the URL address ( ... ). They do not send the full text of articles, so @Voice has to download the article from the Internet to be able to read it aloud or save for later reading. Only by using Copy text function in one app, and pasting it in @Voice, or by saving the full text in one app to storage and opening a file in @Voice, you could avoid Internet connection, but this is not very convenient.
