Optimize the Audio Waveform Hey, I use VivaVideo to edit my videos but a question and problems. 1. Could we make it possible to add advanced speed effects to videos? 2. It crashes the app when I buy something. For example, I asked my dad to buy the subscription and he said yes and it crashes the app. I don't like when it crashes the app, but it could be because he tried to buy it and abruptly crashed the app. 3. When I add music and videos, they don't save at all. Maybe I am a little nit picky about this but when this app shuts down, it shut down every quarter of a sec. 4. Always crashes when I try to open it. 5. There needs to be animated text, music and photos. 6. There should be an option to add sounds to videos. 7. There should be an option for u to crop a video. 8. There should be an option to trim videos. 9. There need to be an option to add animated text to videos. 10. There need to be an option to split a video. 11. There should be an option to increase or decrease intensity and contrast. 12. Please make it so we can add more animations to text. So please consider this one and sorry if this is so long So I was downloading almost every video editing app on the AppStore and a lot of them came with free trials just like this one did. I tried just about all of them. Even the "professional polished" looking apps that charge more for pretty much the exact same thing that you can do on here. I purchased the year VIP subscription and I don't regret it. I use several other apps in conjunction with VivaVideo. The things you can do if you try to learn them, are pretty awesome. There are some limitations when it comes to using it on your phone but partially due to the screen size but once I have my iPad running this app, I have a lot of fun and the effects are super cool. I'd like to see more of them added. And maybe some video filters that have mirroring or even a kaleidoscope view! I'd like a better way of adding or finding music to add to the clips but it's not at all bad in the stage it's in now. If you're looking for a review from someone meticulous about their purchases to sway you into moving forward with the app/subscription:This'll be it. Happy editing. I love viva video! It is so simple to use and you can really make a great video using it. I especially love how it exports as MP4 instead of MOV! Would love to see: 1. BRING BACK ROTATE ALL / APPLY TO ALL when rotating a clip. I import multiple clips and it changes the rotation. If I change the canvas and rotate it how I want it, there is no option to rotate all the clips the same. Instead I'd have to do it one by one which; if there's 35 clips that takes WAY too long!!! Please bring that back. 2. Make it so we can change the LENGTH of the transition. If I use cross fade, it cuts off the sound from the first clip wayyyy too early. I can never use cross fade if there's spoken word for the last 5 seconds of the video. Even if it's silent between the cut, it will start crossfading too early and you can't change the length of the cross fade. On videoshop you can change the length of the transition and I love that. 3. ADD AN ADJUSTABLE SMOOTHING SKIN FILTER!!! Sometimes I don't want to change the color or anything, sometimes all I want to do is smooth out my skin a little bit / make it more consistent. If you add an adjustable smoothing skin effect... this will be the PERFECT app. Just please don't ever change that it exports to MP4 even if you're importing as .MOV! That's my favorite thing about this app! UPDATE: I don't think I'm having the same issues as before, so thanks! For that. Learn More Developer Website App Support Privacy Policy Getty A new report from the security research team at Upstream, published today, warns that users should check their smartphones to see if they have installed one of Android's most popular video apps, one that needs to be handled with extreme caution. Worse, this isn't the first time that this particular app has prompted such serious security warnings. There are concerns with all versions of this app—but some versions have been described as "very dangerous" and need to be removed from devices immediately. The app is VivaVideo—described by its Hangzhou-based developer QuVideo Inc as "one of the biggest free video editing apps for Android, with at least 100 million installs on Play Store." Over recent months, Upstream has followed up those prior warnings to identify the extent of the issue with this particular app. "Previous stories about VivaVideo contain accusations but little evidence," the firm's Geoffrey Cleaves told me, confirming that they had found "conclusive evidence of premium subscription fraud" with versions of the app. The challenge with VivaVideo is that it is widely available on third-party app stores as well as on the Play Store. The app is regularly updated and has embedded code to frustrate security investigations into its behavior. Put simply, the app looks for normal smartphone patterns of life, and if it suspects monitoring is in place it ceases its bad behavior right away. VivaVideo's defense mechanisms included "transferring a list of installed monitoring apps" to an online server, and then "stopping all suspicious background activity when a monitoring app was installed." "VivaVideo has been more successful in its attempts to avoid detection than other apps we have investigated," Cleaves told me. "It gave us more trouble than most. We had to put one phone into a car and drive it around for days before it started attempting fraudulent purchases." The app is continually updated—the last update was yesterday—and different versions of the app will present different levels of threat to users. According to Upstream, the most recent versions of the app on both the Play Store and third-party stores contain the suspicious techniques to hide from security researchers, but not the fraudulent modules. Other versions available on third-party stores include those dangerous threats—it's not possible to pull anything but the most recent update from Play Store. According to Upstream, malicious versions of VivaVideo both run fraudulent adware and also trigger purchases—all unbeknownst to users. The research team says it detected "a fake click on an ad banner, shortly followed by a subscription purchase attempt—at that time the device was sitting unattended in the lab." Unauthorized sign-in attemptsUpstream While on the surface this might appear to be a third-party app store risk, rather than a Play Store issue, that's a dangerous assumption to make. As reported by ZDNet this week, "the official Google Play Store has been identified as the primary source of malware installs on Android devices in a recent academic study—the results showed that around 67% of the malicious app installs researchers identified came from the Google Play Store." While the current version of VivaVideo may have removed its more dangerous modules, Upstream warns that "fraudsters are continuously improving their tradecraft." Let's not forget that this video app was one of those listed by the Indian government in 2017 as "either spyware or 'malicious-ware'," with its military banned from installing it. And if you want further proof that this is an app best removed from your phone, just look at the permissions it requests from Android users who download the app from the Play Store. The app has access to your microphone to record audio, it can view your Wi-Fi connections, read and modify your storage, track your precise location, retrieve a list of all your running apps, take pictures and video, close other apps, read your home settings, pull data from the internet, install shortcuts, read your device's configuration, run at start-up and prioritize itself over other apps. As Upstream explains, "such permission requests are hardly necessary for a video editing application to run properly. What we can extrapolate from such requests is that VivaVideo likely needs them to run hidden activity that is not related to the app's core function." "During the monitored period," Upstream, says, "we blocked over 20 million suspicious mobile transaction requests, originating from over one million infected devices across 19 countries, with VivaVideo installed." And, so, the advice for users is clear. "Older versions of this app, v7.4 and below," Upstream warns, "could prove to be very dangerous to everyday users." Those should be deleted immediately. If you have a more recent version that proceed with caution and at your own risk. "We know older versions of the app are fraudulent," Cleaves says. "We don't know if newer ones are." Remember, the app can be updated, and each update might present new risks. "Personally," Cleaves told me, "I uninstalled all versions of VivaVideo from my phone." QuVideo has been approached for comment on this report, meanwhile Google is looking into this app once again.
